KATI ELLER

A native Charlestonian, Kati Eller is the Editor of Shades of Green Magazine. With a new baby in the family, Kati leads the crusade for living a more healthy and sustainable lifestyle at the Eller home. Kati worked as a school teacher and freight-forwarder until 2006 when she retired to stay at home with her new born. To save money and the environment, Kati telecommutes to work at Shades of Green Magazine. She lives on James Island with her husband Barry and two sons, Dalton, 15 and Daniel, 18 months.

SANDRA GAYLORD

Sandra's career started over 20 years ago with the US Navy and EPA developing guidance and standards for identifying and reporting below ground contamination. This information was used to determine required remediation.

Today, Sandra owns Gaylord Design LLC which specializes in kitchens, baths and interiors that embrace ecologically sound design. Her background in environmental, combined with her extensive design credentials make Sandra the only eco-smart designer in the Lowcountry with this wealth of knowledge.

BEN LEIGH

As The Sustainability Institute's Training Programs Manager, Ben's focus is in building science, economics, and energy conservation. Ben also manages the Institute's energy audit program for homes and businesses, has received EarthCraft House training, and is a trained Home Energy Rater (training completed in September 2007). Ben received a Bachelor's Degree in Psychology from Longwood College and a Master's Degree in Environmental Studies at The College of Charleston.

DR. RENEE TOCCO

As the daughter of a successful chiropractor, Dr. Renee grew up witnessing the miracles of living with a vitalistic philosophy. She is the clinic director of Vitality Health, located in West Ashley. The focus of her practice is overall health promotion, which includes spinal structural stability, pain relief, anti-aging, nutrition, and weight loss. This summer Dr. Renee will complete the requirements to become a certified DAN (Defeat Autism Now) doctor. With this certification she will be qualified in biomedical intervention for autism, Fibromyalgia and other illnesses.
